The experience is possible due to the combination of action and perception. According to the material, the experience is achieved through a process of action and perception, where the two are interdependent.

In the context of the material, the experience is an outcome of a complex interaction. The process involves the active engagement of the individual with the environment, leading to an integrated perception-action sequence. This sequence is essential for the development of an experience that is both meaningful and memorable.

The experience is not just a passive reception of information but an active construction by the mind. The material emphasizes that the experience is a result of the interaction between the observer and the observed. This interaction involves cognitive processes, such as attention, memory, and interpretation, which shape the experience.

The material concludes that the experience is a dynamic process that involves both action and perception. The experience is not a fixed outcome but a continuous process that evolves over time. This dynamic nature of experience highlights the importance of ongoing engagement and interaction in the process of experience formation.
